In 702 the Berbers submitted to the armies of Islam and adopted Islam. The first Moroccan states formed during these years, but many were still ruled by outsiders, some of whom were part of the Umayyad Caliphate that controlled most of northern Africa c. 700 CE. In 1056, a Berber empire arose, however, under the Almoravid Dynasty, and for the next five hundred years, Morocco was governed by Berber dynasties: the Almoravids (from 1056), Almohads (from 1174), Marinid (from 1296), and Wattasid ...

The signing of the Treaty of Fez on March 30, 1912, ushering in the French Protectorate, was a mournful finale to ?Abd al-Hafiz’s reign. Over the preceding decade, large segments of the Moroccan heartland had fallen into French hands; it was only France’s reluctance to alarm other European states that kept her from declaring full dominion over Morocco before 1912.
